9	Golden Gate Bridge Photo Option 1	Fort Point, Long Ave & Marine Dr, San Francisco, CA 94129	Free	You've probably seen all the views of the Golden Gate Bridge from the top, but have you seen it from below? You'd be quite surprised at the architecture that goes into erecting the iconic structure, and you can get your shot from the San Francisco side at Fort Point — yet another former military installation — that allows everyone to feel the mist from the bay waves crashing ashore while being directly underneath the bridge. Getting here from Fisherman's Wharf and Pier 39 is simple — a brisk walk and bike ride through the scenic Marina District and into the Presidio along the water's edge. There's parking here too, free of charge, but it can be in short supply during peak visiting hours.	http://www.californiabeat.org/2009/05/11/where-are-the-five-best-spots-to-photograph-the-golden-gate-bridge
10	Golden Gate Bridge Photo Option 2	Battery Spencer, Golden Gate National Recreation Area, Marin Headlands, Conzelman Rd, Sausalito, CA 94965	Free	This is the postcard shot of the Golden Gate Bridge — the one that you always see plastered on ads and publicity shots clear across the world. And to get this shot, you'll have to cross the bridge from the San Francisco side to the Marin County side to Battery Spencer, a former military installation that protected the bridge and the bay from foreign invaders during World War II. Head through the historic army artifacts and crumbling buildings to land's end where you'll be able to pose in your very own snapshot of the bridge with the breathtaking background of the entire city of San Francisco behind you. You can bike and hike from the San Francisco side — it'll take some legwork to get here.	see above link
